

OCCUPATIONAL HYGIENE PRACTICE ETHICS - "AN OUNCE OF PREVENTION IS WORTH A POUND OF CURE"

Learning Outcomes

- Describe the importance & benefits of ethical behavior as an individual and within organizations.
- Demonstrate a thorough understanding of OH Codes of Ethics and their history.
- Understand the relationship between Good OH Practices and ethical practices.
- Recall and apply the tools available for ethical decision-making.

Abstract

This professional ethics course will associate principles of good occupational hygiene practice with published OH ethical codes. Real-world ethics cases will allow participants to practice and improve their ethical decision-making skills. Attendees will be better equipped to handle ethical challenges that can arise in their everyday professional work.

Agenda

Time	Topic
00:00 – 00:05	Welcome - Introductions
00:05 – 00:30	Lecture 1 - Ethical behaviour as an individual and within organizations.
00:30 – 01:30	Lecture 2 - OH Codes of Ethics and their history
01:30 – 02:00	Break
02:00 – 02:30	Lecture 3 - Good OH Practices and ethical practices
02:30 – 03:30	Case Studies in Small Groups

Presenters, affiliations, and biography *

Nancy McClellan, MPH,
CIH, CHMM

Occupational Health
Management, PLLC
Consultancy
American Industrial Hygiene
Association Treasurer

Prior to returning to independent consulting and expert practice, Nancy McClellan practiced industrial hygiene management on a global scale for both AbbVie, a major producer of highly potent biopharmaceuticals and LafargeHolcim, the world's largest building materials corporation. She has invested over 25 years in practicing occupational hygiene in a wide variety of high hazard industries and she provides expert witnessing, management, training, and select field services to sectors such as the pharmaceutical, automotive, military, hospital, electronic, food, chemical, and commercial facility industries.

Ms. McClellan currently serves as the Chair of the University of Michigan Graduate School of Public Health COEHS External Advisory Board and serves on the American Industrial Hygiene Association Executive Board of Directors as the Treasurer. She recently was the Co-chair and leader for the globally recognized Occupational Hygiene Training Association (OHTA) for 13 years.